Capt. Henry Wirz. One of the most exciting trials brought about by the Civil war was that of Capt, Henry Wirz, who was that of Capt. Henry Wirz, who was the keeper of the Confederate prison at Andersonville, Ga. It is difficult to find an impartial view on the subject, owing to the violent opinions of those in opposition in the great strife. When the rebellion was over, and the Northern arms had won, Wirtz was tried, convicted and executed. To show that the South believed him guiltless they erected to his memory, close by the scenes that brought about his trial, a monument.

No viewpoint will be taken in this brief article as to whether he was guilty of the crimes charged against him, as testified by men of the North or whether he is entitled to the opinion of his friends in the South that he was "judicially murdered" and died a martyr after conviction upon charges of which he was innoupon charges of which he was inno-cent. The mere facts of the trial only will be touched upon.
